

Cyclists raise £2,000

Wednesday, July 14, 2010, 07:00

SETTING OFF: Paul Pady and the Invensys team before the ride

STAFF at Invensys Controls in Southway have raised £2,000 for Cancer Research by taking part in the 2010 Dartmoor Cycle Challenge, writes Vicky Meadows.

Paul Pady, a test engineer and part of Team Invensys, enjoyed the ride and urged others to take on the challenge next year.

"It's such a great route and we're enjoying probably our eighth or more year doing this," he said. "We'll be back again next year to support Cancer Research; get your colleagues together and give it a go yourselves."

Sylvia Arlett, Cancer Research UK's area manager, said: "To raise £2,000 in these economic times is extraordinary and I thank the team most sincerely for their continued support.

"I hope they will come back next year", she added.

(This article first appeared in the Plymouth Herald).